

While the birth of a child with Down syndrome can be devastating at the time, parents learn to enjoy their child and develop hope for their child's future. Children with Down syndrome contribute enormously as family members, and can grow up to be productive adults in the community. Having a baby with Down syndrome can place stress on the family and a marriage. It takes time to learn to cope, and support from an organisation like the DSCA can be invaluable for both parents and the children. Your support for the RGBB fundraising efforts will in some small way benefit those children.

Around the world there are innumerable good causes deserving of support and future projects hope to extend the range and diversity of the Charities assisted by ICING. In addition to providing much needed funds for those less fortunate, ICING would hope to increase awareness of the projects it assists, in the community at large, hopefully leading to alternative and additional sources of support from elsewhere. The type and nature of ICING projects are constantly under review and include consideration for activity in the UK as well as for children in need in Saudi Arabia.

by the RGBB and we hope that readers will be able to support the event, either by attending in person or perhaps with a donation to the charity raffle. Full details are available from the RGBB secretary.

Even if you miss that event, there will be others and should you be able to offer assistance of any kind in the future please do not hesitate to get in touch. RGBB Members will be notified by email prior to any relevant activity.

The level of assistance we will be able to give will depend entirely upon the generosity of participants at the various events planned. The next of these will be a Charity Dinner evening during May organised

In case you need reminding, ICING is not a charity itself. It merely exists to co-ordinate and support the activities of the community. All of the funds raised are passed on to the projects specified and nobody associated with ICING receives any fees or expenses.
